THE Letters which came Yesterday by an Express from the great Marshal of the Crown, do not only confirm the March of the Turks toward our Frontiers, but tell us they have already passed the Pruth, and that their Vanguard is actually arrived at Chocim, to lay Bridge over the Dniester. It may easily be judged how great the Confirmation of this Court is upon this News, considering the weak State of Defence which the King and the Republic are in. The better to discover the true Design of the Porte, all the Letters which came the last Post from Russia and Lublin, have by the King's Order been opened; also the most suspected Letters sent to those Provinces from hence last Week have been opened on the Road. Among these some were found written by Count Jablonowski Palatine of Russia, and by Prince Wieszowski Palatine of Cracow. The last by his Letters conjures his Brother Prince Michael, as also the Palatine of Kiow, and even Stanislaus himself, by the Welfare of their native Country, by their Conscience, and even for the Quiet and Good of all Christendom, to dispose things to a good Peace, rather than put the Kingdom into a new Combustion by introducing the Turks and Tartars. But the Palatine of Russia, in a Letter of his, pressed very earnestly Stanislaus's Party to hasten the Execution of their Enterprize as much as possible, alledging 'twas just the right time to surprize the King here, in full Security, and that 'twould be very difficult for him to escape them. This Discovery was immediately followed by the Seizure of the said Palatine, to whose House an Officer with six of the Life-Guards was sent: He had been timely informed of the stopping of the Post Letters, and was advised to make off, or at least to take Refuge in Cardinal Odeschalchi's House, and to burn his Papers, otherwise he might certainly reckon upon the Loss of his Liberty at least; but his Destiny made him deaf to these Advices: So he was taken into Custody. As for Prince Wieszowski, his Letters were not sufficient to set him clear in the King's Opinion; so that he had need of the Credit of his Friends at Court, and particularly of the great Chancellor of the Crown, who were obliged to engage their Words that he should for the future break off all such Correspondence, and not absent himself from hence without the King's Leave. Upon opening the Mail from Russia, there was found under a Cover directed to a Merchant of Zamosc who is here, a large Packet from Stanislaus and from other Adherents of Sweden, sent from Bender to the Palatine of Russia, in which Packet were also divers Letters that were to be forwarded to Stockholm, under Covers to certain Merchants at Koningsberg, and which thoroughly confirmed what had been discovered by the said Palatine's Letters, with this Addition that the Muscovites in the Peace which they have made with the Porte, have abandoned the Interests of King Augustus. All this being represented to the said Palatine on his Examination, 'twas expected he would of Course have denied all at first; but instead of that, he immediately confessed more than had been discovered, and to prove the Truth of his Confession he sent for and laid before the King his whole Correspondence, with a Journal shewing how he had managed this Intrigue a whole Year. He confessed, and it appeared by his Journal, that to the very last Day of it he had written and affirmed to the Porte, that the whole Kingdom of Poland was still full of Muscovites; that the Palatinates expected with great Earnest-nels and Impatience to be freed from the Domination of King Augustus, by the Assistance and Protection of the Porte, and in short, that he had put in practice whatever he could devise to ruin the King and advance Stanislaus; that for this End he had formed a secret Confederacy in the Palatinates of Podolia, Volhynia, Belia, Russia, Lublin, Sandomir, and great Poland, which was not to break out till the Forces of the Turks and Tartars should come to the Dniester; that he had engaged in this Confederacy a considerable Number of Senators and of the chief of the Nobility, of whose Names he delivered a compleat List; that he had concerted with his Party to seize and carry off the King's Person, which was to be executed the 25th Instant; that he himself had drawn up and sent the Plan, pursuant to which the Turks and Tartars were to approach the Frontier with Stanislaus, and to summon the Poles to declare which of the two Kings they would chuse to have, whereupon the Confederates of the said Palatinates were immediately to declare for Stanislaus, thereby to give a Pretext to the Turks to enter further into the Kingdom, and to use Force against those who would not acknowledge him with the like Readiness: Finally, that he had contrived and done all that a concealed Enemy and a disloyal rebellious Subject could imagine and put in Act against his King.

In Consequence of this Discovery, 30 Men of the Horse-Guards, 50 of the Life-Guards, and 100 of the Polish Guards, were ordered away to disperse themselves into several Roads, and scour the Country, most of them towards Lublin and Lithuania. 'Tis supposed the Starost Bobruyski Sapieha is again an Accomplice in this new Conspiracy. Major General Sapieha is detached with a Party towards Russia, but his Orders are not certainly known. A Regiment of Saxon Horse, which were coming from Lithuania, have likewise Orders sent them to disperse themselves into several Roads.

Mean while the Bishops of Luck, and of Ermland, and Prince Radzivil great Chancellor of Lithuania, are arrived at Court; the Marshal of the Crown, and the Vice-Chancellor of Lithuania, are here likewise; yet none of these are called or admitted to any Council: So that never was there seen in this Kingdom such a Form of Administration; for one single Minister, namely the great Chancellor of the Crown, composes now the King's whole Council, tho' it be a Conjunction so dangerous and important: 'Tis talked however, that the Bishop of Cujavia, and Count Denhoff Marshal of the Confederacy of Sandomir, are about to be admitted into it.

'Tis the general Talk, that the Army of the Crown, which is at present moving towards Caminiec, and to which the Great General was to repair from Nemberg the 7th Instant, is not above 4 or 5000 Men strong; and that many Troops of Horse, as well as most of the Foot, cannot be ordered out of their Quarters for want of Pay. The King has here with him but 200 of the Horse-Guards, 500 of the Life-Guards, and the Polish Guards: A Regiment of Saxon Cavalry is to come from Lithuania; and the two Regiments of Auspach and Meynungen are in Great Poland. With these Troops the King will not be able to make a Stand, if the Turks and Tartars should enter the Kingdom. The Regiments which are recalled from Pomerania, are rather designed, 'tis believed, to cover Saxony than to come hither: For if the King of Sweden be at the Head of the Turkish Army, or with that of the Tartars, which we cannot yet certainly learn, in that Case no body doubts he will take his March directly to Saxony.
